BUSINESS ROADIES – THE BUSINESS IDEA COMPETITION

Let's face it, pitching is important. Regardless of your role within the company, the company's stage, or the company's technology, interactions with potential customers, investors, strategic partners (and sometimes even friends and family) will depend heavily on a sound pitch. The art of pitching in a business competition involves presenting the most compelling overview of your company under a set time constraint customized to your audience. You have a limited amount of time to cultivate the interest of your audience and encourage them to take the next step, whether it be a follow-up phone call, tech demo, investment ask, etc. Business plan competitions force you to distill the million things you could say about your company into a well-rehearsed, micro-analyzed few sentences that is easy for your audience to digest and resonate with their interest. Practice makes perfect, and competitions are great practice for becoming your company's pitcher in the big leagues.
